Archetypes are universal, inborn models of people, behaviors, or personalities that play a role in influencing human behavior. They were introduced by the Swiss psychiatrist Carl Jung, who suggested that these archetypes were archaic forms of innate human knowledge passed down from our ancestors. 1 ?

Moreover, it was essentially an achievement of the second half of life. In the first half of life, a person is, and should be, concerned with emancipating himself from parents and with establishing himself in the world as spouse, parent and effective contributor.". ? The Essential Jung Quotes by C.G. Jung -- Goodreads

The Essential Jung started me down a rabbit hole I'm still exploring today. It was incredibly enlightening. It expanded on concepts I'd heard of for years (like the shadow), introduced new ones (like the anima/animus) and generally made me think about human behavior in a completely different way.
