We Rode the Orphan Trains
book by Andrea Warren

For all the difficulties, the orphan trains offered a way out for many children in desperate plight. Robert Peterson was abandoned in New York City by his father in 1922. At 5 years of age, he rode the orphan train to Nebraska and was placed in loving and caring family. He was forever grateful for the chance at life that the orphan train gave him.

Here, an orphan train is stopping at a station in Nebraska. When orphans grew up, they might find each other and host reunions, in which former riders would meet each other and form bonds over their common experience, riding an orphan train. This is a group photo a group of Minnesota riders had taken during a reunion.
